PENNSYLVANIA GRIT.

THE RECORD OF COL. MADILL'S GALLANT REGIMENT.

the One Hundred and Forty-First Pennsylvania had Bloody Angles at Chancellorsville and Gettysburg.

AR meetings in 1862 drew together e less fireworks ma terial than those of 1861, and the instances of anx ious recruits "falling over one another" in order to get their names en rolled were rarer and perhaps scarcely known but the war quo-

the volunteers had raying qualities that made up for lack of enthusiasm. At a gathering of citizens held in a church in Terrytown, Bradford county, Pa., early in August, 1862, one of the speakers was a young lawyer of Towarda, Guy H. Watkins, a man of good social position and bright prospects; married, with hostages to fortune, and surrounded with every temptatic 1 to stay a ome and make the most of life.

At the close of a sound war speech he mid that after careful deliberation he had decided that it was his duty to go to his country's aid in the hour of peril; that he had often thought how, when the war was over, he would be telling his children the story of the conflict and they would say to him, "Were you there?" He was going to be able to say, "Yes, I was there, and I tried to do my duty."

Throughout the quiet vales of northern Pennsylvania a like spirit to that dis-played by Watkins was at work under lers by the dozens and scores-farm ers, merchants, teachers, students, preach ers and others, not a few so young that they modes by declined offices in the ranks, and even some were rejected by the government on the score of youth. ag. 29 War Governor Curtin accepted and ndered to the United States service a giment composed of ten companies raised Bradford and Susquehanna counties and designated the One Hundred and Forty-first Pennsylvania infantry. Guy Watkins, who had recruited one company and been chosen its captain, was flected fleutenent colonel of the regiment. The first duty of the One Hundred and Fifty first was to go to the defense of Washington while McClellan's army was battling with Lee on Maryland soil in Sep-tember, 1862. When Lee was pushed back southward to the Rappahannock the regi ment went to the front and was placed smong tried and disciplined troops in Hearny's old division of Hocker's corps. At the first battle of Fredericksburg it had as baptism of fire, and coolly met the fusilade of shot and spell poured upon Mende's Pennsylvania reserves by Stone wall Jackson's batteries Dec. 13. On Burnsile's second campaign, January, 1863, the egiment was selected to cross the Rappa pnock alone and carry the heights on Lagior's Hill at the point of the bayonet, the forlorn hope of the movement, but a severe storm put an end to the affair before the crossing was made. But at Chancel-larsville, in May, 1863, the field of many remarkable struggles, the hour of trial came.

On May 2 Stonewall Jackson's corps, by a flank march, struck the Union right and crushed it, rolling it up ike a scroll. The Third corps, led by Gen. Daniel E. Sickles, became a break-water for the tide of Confederates rushing with blind impetuosity in pursuit enth corps. The wounding of Stonewall on the evening of the 2d caused a tempovery halt in the plans of the Confederates, t on the morning of the Sd, Sunday, his corps, led by the cavalryman, Jeb Stuart, and under the personal direction of Gen. Lee, renewed the fight and compelled the Union commander to order a general retreat.

Sickles' corps, under imperative orders abandoned position after position, and the Confederates followed up with growing enthusiasm. The brigade of Gen. Charles Graham, of Birney's division, to which he One Hundred and Forty-first belonged, was rear guard of the corps, as it had been during all the retrograde movements, and when it became necessary to vacate certain evated positions known as Fairview and Hazel Grove and remove the artillery, with the exulting Confederates pushing madly in pursuit, Graham was ordered to charge to the rear and check the enemy's advance

"RALLY HOUND THE FLAG, BOYS." draham marched his men down the slow of Fairview crest and up the slope of Hazel Grove, where the Confederates stood ready to receive them. Halting in a belt of oal timber at twenty rods from their line Graham answered the sharp Confederate fire with a few volleys, then ordered the advance resumed. The One Hundred and Forty-first held the right of the brigade. The whole line moved forward with a cheer tout made the woods ring, and the Conlederates gave way and fell back in confusion to a ridge behind them, where an old log fence offered some shelter. With the logs for a breastwork they made a stand and poured a galling fire upon Gra-

Again the advance was sounded and the brigade attempted to carry the works. The situation of the One Hundred and Forty first was most desperate. A second log fence extending forward from the first named and at right angles with it also quickly took advantage of thus forming two lines. These two lines created an angle into the bollow of which the One Hunfired and Forty-first bravely rushed. The regiment numbered only 417 men and 24 efficers, although this was its first battle. It struggled gallantly to break through the angle and disrupt the enemy's line, but it was overwhelmed. A whole Conham's brigade, and in a short time the One Hundred and Forty-first was engaged, front, flank and rent.
The crisis that tries men's soldier mettle had fallen upon those quiet, sound hearted Pennsylvanians, and away off in one cor-ner of the great fight at Chancellorsville they stood up in the lone woods and fought like heroes. Both the regimental color bearers were quickly shot down, and the leader of the color company, Capt. Swart, was instantly killed while lifting one of the fallen flags. One flag was subsequently carried by the colonel, H. J. Madill, and the other by the major. Lient. Col. Watkins redeemed his pledge most nobly. Early in the fight his horse had been killed under him by a shell and he himself se-verely stunned. Two days before this af-fair the same thing had occurred, and although his companions urged him on both occasions to go to the rear he was to the very front and received a minie ball through the breast while urging his men over the Confederate works. Twelve of ficers out of the 24 engaged and 284 men out of 417 were killed and wounded. The killed and mortally hurt numbered 62. Gen. Graham wisely withdrew his men before their slaughter was complete, and retired slowly. On reaching the wooded ridge some distance from the log fence and where the brigade had begun the fighting, he ordered the colonels of regiments to reform their disordered ranks. Col. Madill, whose smiling face and encouraging words had animated the regiment throughout that bloody Sunday morning, fixed the flagstaff of the One Hundred and Fortyfirst, which he was still carrying, firmly in the ground and in a loud voice struck up the familiar camp song: Rally round the flag, boys.

The men responded heartily, joining in the singing until the woods that shortly before resounded with their cheers were echoing back the notes of music than which nobler was never heard on the battlefield, and with unshaken coolness and resolu-tion, despite the terrible experiences of the hour, the unwounded survivors faced the enemy again with closed up ranks.

Chancellorsville was followed by Gettys burg, two months later, on Pennsylvania soil. The story of that fight is too well known to need rehearsing. The One Hundred and Forty-first was with Graham's brigade in the front line of the famous salient angle formed by Sickles in the

WHERE ARE MY MEN!

Peach Orchard, on Emmittsburg pike, July 2, 1863. In fact, the One Hundred and Forty-first was the angle itself. It numbered at 3 o'clock that day 200 men all told. After some maneuvering to get into the best position to meet the daring assaults of Longstreet's Confederates, coming from two directions against the angle. Col. Madill found his regiment alone, facing a withering fire from artillery and musketry on both fronts. When a whole Confederate division emerged from a shel-tering wood and dashed for the Peach Orchard, one of the captains of the regiments said to the colonel, "Hadn't we better get

"I have no orders to get out. If I had my old regiment I could whip all of them," was the response. In twenty minutes, however, the brave colonel found that he must go or leave his last man in the fatal angle. At the first Confederate volley 80 fell. In a few minutes 27 lay dead within sight of the colonel. The major and the adjutant were killed, and all the color guards and both color bearers were killed or wounded. A wounded man saw the bearer of the state flag shot down and took the staff from his hands. In a few minutes the hearer of the stars and stripes fell, and the same wounded man caught up the falling flag and carried it until relieved of it by the colonel. With nineteen unwounded men and his flag intact Col Madill marched back before the wave of enemies pressing up on all sides. Graham had been wounded and captured and the line at the angle was destroyed. Gen. Sickles, surprised and overcome by the sudden and awful disaster, was hasten ing forward into the very jaws of death to try and save something. But it was too late. Where an hour before two lines of his troops had shown bold fronts west and south, the Confederates were in possession and were following up their successes by pushing boldly and with all the arder of triumphant soldiers toward Little Round Top, the key to Gettysburg. Seeing Col. Madill moving off with his beggarly handful the general pleaded, "Colonel, for God's sake, can't you hold on?" The leader of the once proud One Hundred and Forty-first cast an eye along the ground behind his faw followers, as though measuring ghostly ranks filled by his fallen heroes, and with a husky voice exclaimed, Where are my men?"

Could be have held on with 19 soldier against 10,000? He would have tried had it been so ordered, but in an instant Sickles was cut down by a musket ball, and resistance at the Peach Orchard and the Wheatfield, in fact everywhere in front of Little Round Top, was ended.

The One Hundred and Forty-first lost 149 killed and wounded. The killed and mortally hurt numbered 49. Out of 9 officers 6 were killed or wounded. The loss amount ed to over 75 per cent, of those engaged and was exceeded only once on the Union side in the war-namely, the First Minne sota, which lost 80 per cent.

Yet the regiment was not wheel out. It was transferred to the Second corps in the spring of 1834, and took part in all the bloody charges led by Hancock from the Wilderness to Petersburg. Lieut. Col. Watkins, having recovered from his Chancellorsville wound and returned from captivity, was in command. In the assaults at Petersburg, June 18, 1834, the regiment stormed the Confederate intrenchments, and there Col. Watkins met his doom. He was shot through the body while leading sota, which lost 80 per cent. was shot through the body while leading his men in the heat of battle and died on Governments, Stocks and Bonds, New York, Sept. 24.—The announcement in regard to Missouri Pacific dividends today caused general surprise and for a short time consternation. While the immediate effect upon the Missouri Pacific and the rest of Gould's stocks was decidedly demor-alizing, the whole market felt the depress-ing effect. M. Germain See has related the history of several cases of consumption, all of which were relieved and some cured by his new treatment. He shuts his patient up for two, three or more hours daily in a bermetically closed metallic chamber, into which is slowly admitted a current of compressed air, which, baving passed through a mixture of creosote and eucalyptol, is saturated with the vapor of these substances. Within a year ten cases of phthisis have been submitted to this treat ment, all of which cases, with one exception, had reached the period of softening and bacilli had been detected in the sputa. The results obtained were: Return of appetite, even in advanced cases; gain o weight and strength, fall of temperature to the normal in a week or two, diminution of cough and of purulency of sputs and disappearance of other unfavorable general symptoms. Cat's Blood for Eryslpelas.

in his treatise on "Medicine" the Rev. Mr. Doderidge has to say concerning ery sipelas and its cure: "The erysipelas, or St. Anthony's fire, was usually cured by cir cumscribing the afflicted parts with the bloed of a black cat. Hence there was scarcely a black cat to be seen whose ears and tail had not been frequently cropped for their contribution of blood."-St. Louis

CHICAGO, ILL., Sept. 24.—Markets were un-settled to-day. Wheat started higher, but New Yorkers had big selling orders here and buying became very cautious. St. Louis was also selling and the Northwest joined, and disalso seiling and the Northwest joined, and dis-patches reported general weakness abroad. The result was that the tone here quickly changed to weakness, and there was a steady drop. Later there was some covering and a re-action of ic, but an easy feeling prevailed. changed to weakness, and there was a steady drop. Later there was some covering and a reaction of ic, but an easy feeling prevailed.

Corn was weak early on account of continued warm weather. The crop is out of danger from frost, but the fact that some of White & Co. a brokers in the late corn deal were suspected of an effort to liquidate long, corn for this account started half a cent higher, at 4842 and touched 494c, but turned downward at once to 474c. Later, seeing the pressure was recovered, prices reacted some and sold up to 494c, cased off to 484c, grew firm and closed at 494c. Hog products—Inclined to weakness, with loss of 10 to 15 cents in pork and 25 to 75 cents in lard and ribs. Leading futures closed;
